

Teaching Artifact: "How to Read a Comic"

Nicole Neitzke¹

California State University, Fullerton, California, USA

Instructor Commentary

This teaching artifact is one I created using the Comic Life 3 app and it was created for the purposes of teaching my students how to read a comic. This prepares them to read an assigned graphic novel for class, namely Fables: Animal Farm, while briefly explaining how comics act are complex multimodal texts. In particular, I draw inspiration and definitions from Scott McCloud and Dale Jacobs. The comic itself also features various assets from existing comic stories, which I cite on the last page along with my works cited. The gain from using this artifact, particularly when paired with an assigned comic or graphic novel, is that students will be able to learn fairly quickly how to read a comic if they have never read one. Even for those who have, they learn condensed vocabulary and multimodal attributes that might otherwise be difficult to teach or explain in class, or through other dense textbooks. Lastly, it is an engaging medium that encourages close-reading. The loss, however, is the stretched definition of multimodality as a whole. Naturally, print comics do not employ sound or gestures in its pages, so those modes' definitions have to be expanded. Furthermore, it is fairly limited to specific assignments involving the comic medium.

¹ Nicole Neitzke recently received her Master's in English, along with a Professional Certificate in Teaching and Writing, at the California State University in Fullerton. Email: nicoleneitzke@csu.fullerton.edu

HOW TO READ A COMIC

BY NICOLE
NEITZKE

CALIFORNIA STATE UNIVERSITY, FULLERTON

BASICALLY, READING COMICS WILL TAKE SOME PRACTICE.

AND EVEN THEN, SOME AUTHORS WILL PLAY WITH THE FORM AND TRICK YOU. SO DON'T PANIC IF YOU LOSE YOUR PLACE.

LET'S SEE, WHAT'S NEXT?

OH! RIGHT, SO THERE ARE DIFFERENT TYPES OF WORD BUBBLES.

THIS IS A THOUGHT BUBBLE, WHICH GIVES YOU SPECIAL INSIGHT TO THE CHARACTER THINKING IT.

OKAY, LET'S GET OUT OF MY HEAD NOW.

NEXT UP IS...

YELLING!

AHEM. FOR THIS ONE, IT INDICATES A CHARACTER'S RAGE.

HOWEVER, THIS ISN'T A FAST RULE EITHER. SOMETIMES WORDS WILL BE BOLDED TO INDICATE THIS, OR JUST HAVE A BUNCH OF EXCLAMATION POINTS.

IT'S ALSO IMPORTANT TO NOTE THE FONT WITHIN A WORD BUBBLE.

SOMETIMES BOLDED WORDS OR ITALIC ONES ARE USED TO EMPHASIZE SOMETHING IMPORTANT, LIKE A SPECIFIC NAME OR AN EMOTION.

MEANWHILE...

THE NARRATOR DECIDES TO SPEAK!

AH!

POW

COMPARE THIS MOMENT IN AN OLD ISSUE OF SPIDER-MAN . . .

... TO THIS MOMENT.

WHICH ONE
STANDS OUT
MORE?